How to use this document

This is the single source of truth for every chat in the Vouelle project. Check every page, product, photo, ad and piece of copy against it before producing or approving anything.

Vouelle in one sentence: timeless, quietly expensive-looking winter clothing for women who dress like they grew up with it — camel coats, cable knits, tailored trousers and velvet for the holidays, shown in snowy estates, wood-panelled libraries and city townhouses.

Three rules that override everything else

1. Quiet over loud	No neon, no logos, no exclamation marks, no countdown timers, no “70% OFF” banners. If it shouts, it is not Vouelle.
2. Consistency over novelty	Ten new products a day must look like one collection. Every item passes the palette, fabric and photography rules before it goes live.
3. Honest heritage	The feel is old; the facts are true. The brand was founded in 2026 and says so. Fabric names match what the item actually contains.

Project operating context

Facts supplied by the founder, Kang Jie. Where the brand book and later instructions differ, the later instruction wins and is noted.

Business	Vouelle, a women’s fashion store on Shopify. Clean slate: ignore any earlier stores or earlier uses of the name.
Ambition	A scalable, multi-million business that eventually runs autonomously, around the clock, with AI handling as much of operations as possible.
Markets	English-speaking: United States, United Kingdom, Canada. (The brand book was written for the U.S. and Canada; the UK was added afterward. See UK localization below.)
Season focus	Winter womenswear for now, as it is winter in the target markets. Other seasons come later.
Model	Dropshipping. Products sourced from AliExpress and pushed to Shopify through DSers.
Catalog	Very large inventory with new pieces uploaded daily (the brand book plans about ten a day).
Marketing	Significant paid social spend on TikTok and Meta, plus organic Pinterest, Instagram and TikTok.
Project goal	Maximise profitability: store design for conversion, retention and profit, while staying inside the brand rules.
Positioning	Old-money, premium, quietly expensive at an attainable price. Approved store design: “Heritage Ivory” (ivory and navy). Pastels were rejected as too childish.

1. Brand foundation

The master slogan is “Elegance, Inherited.” and the launch campaign is “The Winter Estate.” Everything else exists to make those two lines believable.

Brand story (About page draft)

The best-dressed women rarely look new. Their coats are camel, their knits are cream, their trousers fall just so, and none of it is trying too hard.

Vourelle was founded in 2026 to build wardrobes in that spirit. Every piece is chosen against one question: would she still want to wear it ten winters from now?

New pieces arrive every morning, each selected to sit quietly beside the last.

Welcome to the house. Vourelle. Elegance, inherited. Est. MMXXVI.

Brand pillars

Pillar	What it means on the site
Heritage	Classic silhouettes, estate and equestrian settings, serif type, Roman-numeral dates.
Restraint	Muted palette, lots of white space, no hype language, no flashing sale badges.
Refinement	Tailored fits, clean product shots, precise fabric and fit details on every listing.
Warmth	Winter hospitality: firesides, wool, candlelight, a gracious and welcoming tone.

The Vourelle woman (target customer)

- Age: core 26–50; aspirational 21–25; established 50+.
- Where she lives: cold-winter cities and suburbs — New York, Boston, Connecticut, Chicago, Denver, Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver — plus southern shoppers packing for ski trips and holiday travel. (UK equivalents to define; see below.)
- How she shops: fewer, better-looking pieces rather than hauls. Items that look more expensive than they cost, reliable sizing, easy outfit ideas.
- What inspires her: New England winters, country weekends, equestrian style, ski chalets, European old-town streets, classic films.
- Where she scrolls: Pinterest, Instagram and TikTok, especially “quiet luxury” and “old money” content.
- Personality in one line: a woman in her late thirties who rides on weekends, reads in the library, never raises her voice and remembers your name.

2. Brand voice and copy rules

Vourelle speaks like a gracious host at a country house: calm, precise and warm, never selling out loud. If a line would fit on a fast-fashion site, rewrite it.

Writing rules

- No exclamation marks anywhere on the website. No emoji on the website; on social, one at most, and only when it adds meaning.
- Use American English spelling on the site (color, favorite) for consistency across markets.
- Call items pieces, the catalog the collection, customers clients in service contexts.
- Show luxury, don't claim it. Use the word "luxury" rarely; let fabric, fit and photography carry it.
- Short sentences. One idea per sentence. Product copy opens with a feeling, then gives facts.
- Never create false urgency: no countdown timers, no fake "12 people are viewing this" pop-ups.

3. UK localization (proposed, pending founder approval)

The UK was added after the brand book was written. These are working defaults for any chat that touches UK content, not final decisions.

- Keep the brand voice unchanged. Keep American English on the site unless the founder decides on a separate UK spelling.
- Prices shown in GBP for UK visitors, USD for the U.S. and CAD for Canada, using Shopify Markets.
- UK sizing and duties: display UK sizes alongside U.S. sizes; state clearly whether prices include VAT and duties. Never mislead on delivery times.
- Winter cities to reference for the UK client: London, Edinburgh, the Cotswolds, the Lake District, Bath. Country-estate and Barbour-style countryside imagery already fits.
- Update the social bio and shipping copy to "Shipping to the U.S., U.K. & Canada" only once each market's shipping is actually live.

4. Rules for every chat in this project

- Check all output against the three override rules and the voice rules above before finalizing.
- Never invent brand heritage. The brand is 2026-founded, and the copy says Est. MMXXVI.
- Product copy must state fabric and fit accurately. Because products are dropshipped, verify composition from the supplier listing and never claim wool, cashmere or silk unless the listing confirms it.
- No fake urgency, fake reviews, fake stock counts or invented discounts, on the site or in ads. This is both the brand rule and consumer-protection law in all three markets.
- Optimize for profit inside the brand: conversion, average order value, retention and ad efficiency, without breaking the tone.

- Automation-first: when suggesting workflows, prefer ones that AI or apps can run without daily manual work, and flag where a human check is still needed (quality, compliance, refunds).

5. Source coverage

The brand book is 32 pages. The version supplied to this project covered pages 1–3 (foundation, slogans, story, pillars, customer, voice and writing rules). The remaining sections — which the brand book’s own rules refer to as the palette, fabric and photography rules, plus the visual identity and Shopify build instructions — have not yet been added. Append them here as they become available.
